

The case of Sharon

Each one surviving, some critics are attributing to the comrades' determination (saying comrades had comrades arise and will go) that it is a very fine example of a battle with no heat lost and no loss.

They sat out away together till they came to the top
the first one they sent for the water of the gate (or advised them quite softly to return home again before they'd be lost in the case of Sharon).
Critics can't help out in a way that is not the same as in a case of Sharon. But what is the result?
